

Migrating through university: International students' migration journeys in Japan, 11 November 2021

00:44:37 Simon Marginson: Colleagues please give thought to questions (and statements, if you wish) in relation to Tom's presentation. What is your experience of education and migration?

00:50:39 Monika Jaiswal-Oliver: Hello Thomas, Thank you for presentation, my question is- As the students were graduating did they get support from institution like career services to prepare them to find jobs in Japan?

00:51:12 C Sanger: At the policy level, does ISM relate at all to the problem of an ageing population?

00:52:45 Yannan Yu: Hi Tom, thanks for your excellent presentation. Is student migration one of the main trends in the internationalisation of HE in Japan? Could you enlighten me- what are the top 3 trends in the internationalisation of HE in Japan? Thanks.

00:53:13 Soyoung Lee: Hi Tom, thank you for your wonderful presentation! Your analysis process by using the vignette was particularly interesting to me. I think it is a really effective way of investigating student agency. What do you think would be some aspects of agency, or practical tools for agency, that were less/not captured by using this vignette? Something important about agency beyond what this vignette can capture?

00:55:48 C Sanger: Elsewhere in this series of seminars we have talked about ISM to the West as access to the privileges of whiteness. That does not seem to apply here. Is there a similar overall narrative (eg, 'orientalism')?

00:56:56 Ikram Toumi: Thank you for the informative presentation. I have a question about your participants. Did you notice any difference between students from the global south and students from northern countries? There are a lot of issues of nationality privileges in migration and international education and I was wondering if that affects the migration experience and aspirations of international students in Japan too.
