

Academic Profession Studies Going Global? What We Gain and What We Lose by Using Big Data, 15 March 2022

00:19:56 Mohammad Moghadam: good evening from Tehran, iran

00:22:03 Dr Reuben Nguyo: Good evening from Kenya

00:22:25 Maria-Ligia Barbosa: Good morning from Rio de Janeiro

00:22:50 CRISTINA DE CARVALHO: Good morning from Brasília, Brazil

00:23:19 Glen Chatelier: Good Late evening from Bangkok Thailand

00:40:26 Glen Chatelier: Would the new methods incorporate cross disciplinary focuses, and larger reach teams. What proportions would Big Data contribute to new and innovative search?

00:48:32 Simon Marginson: Time to bring forward your questions and statements - indicate that you want to join the discussion by posting HERE in the Chat!

00:53:15 Kristy James: To anyone interested in working with big data from Elsevier, you can read about the computational platform of ICSR Lab here:

<https://www.elsevier.com/icsr/icsrlab> (or write me a DM with questions if you need too). It was a pleasure to help out with data access for these interesting questions!

00:57:27 YUSUF OLDAC: You said that we HE researchers have theories data scientists lack. I wanted ask for a concrete example on this. What was your theoretical or conceptual framework(s) in your Graying of the academic profession project, for example?

00:58:13 YUSUF OLDAC: *You said that we HE researchers have theories, which data scientists lack.

01:00:03 Simon Marginson: More questions / statements please

01:00:35 Dr. Bhaskar C.: How big data may be used in disciplines e.g. Education or say social sciences?

01:06:37 Simon Marginson: MORE QUESTIONS PLEASE

01:08:01 Mary Ellen Sloane: How might these methods be adapted to advocate at the institutional level for more research infrastructure and support?

01:08:17 Sergio Celis: How can we address blind spots/bias of academic profession big data? Language? World regions? Other types of intellectual products? Most professors are not consistently productive through papers overtime.

01:09:38 Mary Ellen Sloane: need to connect audio

01:09:45 Agata Mikolajewska: We can hear you!
