

Defamiliarising the Colonial Imaginaries Embedded in Interculturality: Self-Other Dichotomy and the Buddhist Concept of Non-self, 17 May 2022

00:47:28 Carol Dennis: Indeed. Ukrainian refugees are housed in the homes of UK volunteers. Others are sent to Rwanda.

00:50:11 Marta Kozłowska: Yes, I see your point, Carol. Still the biggest wave - over 3mln people, is actually in central Europe (most housed privately) rather than in refugee centres.

00:54:12 Simon Marginson: Colleagues it is time to think now about your questions and comments about these powerful ideas. Enter the Q&A by posting your ideas in the Chat now!

00:55:28 Simon Marginson: Don't hold back, take risks, speak and interact

00:57:12 Mark Childs: I'm curious about the ways in which European binaries differ from non-European binaries (accepting your argument that binaries themselves can be harmful) what other forms of binaries do we see when looking at interculturalism?

01:01:55 Marta Kozłowska: Thushari, just to bring up one aspect following the Prospero quote, I'd be interested in your thoughts around colonial imaginary and medical education in particular?

01:04:41 Marta Kozłowska: Thank you.

01:05:06 Tahmina Yesmin Shova: I would like to know, if the present cultural difference for the most part is defining by the western pattern, then what kind of interpretation we can look forward to define the significance of cultural identity other than colonial view?

01:05:35 solomon zewolde: Is there a permanent 'self'?
