00:42:57 Simon Marginson: start thinking about your questions and comments!

00:45:54 Lili Yang: Thank you for the interesting presentation. I wonder are students 'static' in terms of their capacity/viewing of themselves, etc. over the course of higher education? Are you indicating that it is their original background that holds the major explanatory power for their employment? What would the future of students from humble students?

00:46:56 Yushan Xie: Thank you all for your very informative presentations. For the presentation on Global and local possible selves, I noticed the sample also included students coming from a 'less' prestigious institution so I wonder whether and how students perceptions of the possible selves vary across different type of institutions. Thank you!

00:50:09 Axel Dessen: How do you (quantify)/measure the effect of international studies by elite Chinese students on labour market success back in China? How does it compare to only possessing national credentials?

01:02:09 Simon Marginson: more QUESTIONS please!

01:02:56 Axel Dessen: That was very clear thank you!

01:04:35 Yushan Xie: Thank you very much for the response.

01:06:33 Simon Marginson: more QUESTIONS please!

01:06:38 Axel Dessen: Is there a perceivable trend by rural / non-elite Chinese students seeking global opportunities (universities abroad, internships etc) to boost their credentials at home, given this constrained labour market?
