

Insights into evaluation of research “quality”: what role for the researcher? 21 July 2022

00:45:13 Simon Marginson: Your QUESTIONS and COMMENTS please! Join the discussion!

00:49:27 Ariadna Garza-Ortiz: Thank you very much. Nowadays the pressure for acquiring Good quality but also the market interests is high. It is also an ill interest for publications regardless of quality. So how do you think the emergence of predatory journals and bad quality papers from researchers are going to grow and how to reduce such practices?

00:50:06 Phyllis Mercer: Brilliant presentation content

00:50:38 Beata Borowska-Beszta: Thank you for presenting vital issues!

00:50:52 Altaf Qadeer: wonderful presentation. I highly appreciate. More later.

00:53:30 Leandro Rodriguez-Medina: A few years ago, at my university, there were some opportunities to discuss research evaluation. (Not) surprisingly, strong debates started between academics in the sciences (physics, mathematics, chemistry) and social sciences and humanities. At the time I noticed that while we in the social sciences and humanities were thinking about recognising disciplinary differences in evaluation, our colleagues in science and engineering were not. I don't know if this is similar to what is happening elsewhere, but my question is whether you have detected strategies to broaden the range of perspective of colleagues in the sciences and engineering to accommodate more multidimensional assessment.

00:53:38 Penny Welch: Super presentation with fascinating findings. Just one dimension that seems not to be emphasised in role of editor is that of selecting articles that are going to be interesting and useful for readers. (I am co-editor of Learning and Teaching <https://www.berghahnjournals.com/view/journals/latiss/latiss-overview.xml>)

00:53:39 Ariadna Garza-Ortiz: What are the suggestions for quality measurement of new papers as most commonly the topics are multidisciplinary or even transdisciplinary? As those multi or transdisciplinary approaches have proved to be more useful. Thank you very much for such a clear presentation.

00:53:48 Altaf Qadeer: A dream (started in 2003) was to start research journals for children, in simple language, pictures, explanatory understanding. Please check this link:

00:58:39 Simon Marginson: More questions please!

01:01:26 Altaf Qadeer: @Maria: Your email please ? Thanks ! Your work can open doors for more work.

01:03:43 James Robson: Fantastic presentation. Given we're seeing massification of the publishing industry, I wonder if we risk overemphasising the the role of journal editors in curating disciplinary boundaries

01:05:25 Penny Welch: If any participants are interested in becoming reviewers for Learning and Teaching: The International Journal of Higher Education in the Social Sciences email me on p,welch@wlv.ac.uk

01:07:41 Beata Borowska-Beszta: Maria, I'm intrigued by concept of 'soul-touching' research, would you please decode this symbol?

01:11:28 CGHE Webinars: Thank you for joining us today. A recording of this session will be on the CGHE site tomorrow: <https://www.researchcghe.org/events/cghe-seminar/insights-into-evaluation-of-research-quality-what-role-for-the-researcher/>

01:12:12 Altaf Qadeer: I am interested to join your research group/ team. Thanks.

01:12:20 CGHE Webinars: The CGHE webinar programme will be back in our next academic year. Those webinars will be listed here: <https://www.researchcghe.org/events/>

01:12:45 Rebecca Lyu: Thanks for your presentation, I am wondering if you have imagined the ideal relationship between editor, reviewer and author?

01:13:35 Ariadna Garza-Ortiz: Great to hear that the program is going to get back. I discover this webinars quite late in the year! Congratulations.

01:13:51 Haley Hazlett: I must jump to another call, but thank you for a wonderful presentation and stimulating discussion! Thanks to the organizers as well.

01:19:54 Altaf Qadeer: Perhaps in this age of international interactions, how well we coordinate research journals published in various languages[Multilingual dimension] .
(Maria your work is useful in many ways)
