00:38:52 Ka Ho Mok: dear participants, please feel free to raise your questions through the chat functions. Your comments are also welcome.

00:39:32 Glen Chatelier: East Asian Education since ancient times has gained from transmigratory cultures, what would be some evidences of the present East Asian Education growth in both the modern sciences and in the emergent sciences?

00:56:17 Joshua Ee: Thank you for the presentation! There has been growing cooperation between East Asian countries and ASEAN, especially through the East Asia Summit and ASEAN+3. Beyond traditional examples of East-West collaborations, how has collaborations with ASEAN influenced education in East Asia or experiences amongst its students? (e.g., student migration/jogi yuhak, development programmes)

00:59:47 Vedika Kedia: As mentioned in the presentation, science publications from universities in East Asia outnumber those from leading Western universities like MIT. How long do you think is it before universities like Tsinghua compete with MIT in overall university rankings and become most preferred destination for international students?

01:02:33 McQueen Sum: Thank you for the wonderful presentation! I'm wondering if your new book shows evidence on whether in reality East Asian HE is increasingly "westernised" or able to maintain their distinctiveness from the "Western" model of HE? Where does East Asian HE stand and where is it heading?

01:07:04 Joshua Ee: Thank you so much
