

CGHE series on The Critical Economics of Higher Education – webinar 2: Regulating the teacher: is there any alternative to regulation?, 5 April 2022

00:23:02 Muhammad Abdul Wahid: Welcome to all From Bangladesh

00:23:56 Ingrid Snijders: Welcome to all from The Netherlands!

00:33:32 Rozerin Yasa: Thanks! Hello from Ireland!

00:35:39 Glen Chatelier: Is your argument veering away from Education as public good and pivoting towards bias of failure?

00:54:29 James Robson: Do start adding your questions here in the chat

01:00:58 Vincent Carpentier: Can you say more about the teaching of economics of education articulated to other social sciences? how do you see the future shape of institutional differentiation in Indian HE?

01:05:30 Anup Saikia: Do you see any possibility of higher education in India breaking free from mediocrity courtesy the new education policy? most faculty members are home grown... but we aspire for better ranks globally: isn't this a contradiction by itself?

01:09:09 Jorge Enrique Delgado: Being critical about the economics model that shapes higher education today, do you think we should be challenging issues we take for granted about the academic profession. I'm concerned that we keep "measuring" professors by numbers of indexed publications? What about going back to the foundations and purpose of higher education?
